Political Setup Study Ordered In Central African Federation

LONDON (CP) - The government Tuesday gave details of a special commission to study the political setup in the turbulent Central African Federation in preparation for constitutional changes.

Prime Minister Macmillan named most of the 26 members of the commission, although the opposition Labour Party withheld its support.

Among those appointed was Donald G. Creighton, professor of history at the University of Toronto.

Plans also call for three government and three opposition members of Parliament but these were not named because of Labour's stand.

Opposition leader Hugh Gaitskill demanded an assurance that the commission would be allowed to advise on systems of government other than the present federal union of the three territories - Northern and Southern Rhodesia and Nyasaland.

Macmillan replied that the terms of reference for the commission "to consider the whole field of redistribution of powers in either direction" were wide. Labor MP Aneurin Bevan, labelled Macmillan's reply "ambiguous."

Colonial Secretary Ian MacLeod recently told a reporter that the government wanted as members of the commission Commonwealth representatives with a deep knowledge of federal problems.

Creighton, one of Canada's leading historians, has made the study of Canadian development his main field. He is the author of The Commercial Empire of the St. Lawrence, Dominion of the North, and a two-volume biography of John A. Macdonald, the father of Confederation.

The commission, which is expected to start work in February, will gather facts and opinions throughout the federation. The chairman is Viscount Monckton, former Conservative government minister. Its findings could be used as advice for the government's scheduled review of the federation's constitution in 1960.

RECORD OUTPUT
OTTAWA (CP) - Canadian production of steel ingots reached a record 123,166 tons in the week ended Nov. 21; the bureau of statistics reported. This was 3.9 per cent above the preceding week's 118,521 tons and almost 26 per cent higher than the year-earlier figure of 88,066.
