THE PIRATE.

By Sir Walter Scott.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

"I accept your gift," said Norna, "in token that, if I have in ought been accessory to your fate, it was as the involuntary and grieving agent of other powers. Well did you say we direct not the current of the events which hurry us forward, and render our utmost efforts unavailing; even as the wells of Tutiloo can wheel the stoutest vessel round and round, in despite of either sail or steering.—Pacolet!" she exclaimed, in a louder voice, "what ho! Pacolet!"

A large stone, which lay at the side of the wall of the hovel, fell as he spoke, and to Cleveland's surprise, if not somewhat to his fear, the misshapen form of the dwarf was seen, like some overgrown reptile, extricating himself out of a subterranean passage, the entrance to which the stone had covered.

Norna, as if impressed by what Cleveland had said on the subject of her supernatural pretensions, was so far from endeavoring to avail herself of this opportunity to enforce them, that she hastened to explain the phenomenon he had witnessed.

"Such passages," she said, "to which the entrances are carefully concealed, are frequently found in these islands—the place of retreat of the ancient inhabitants, where they sought refuge from the rage of the Normans, the pirates of that day. It was that you might avail yourself of this, in case of need, that I brought you hither. Should you observe signs of pursuit, you may either lurk in the bowels of the earth until it has passed by, or escape, if you will, through the farther entrance near the lake, by which Pacolet entered but now.—And now farewell! Think on what I have said, for as sure as you now move and breathe a living man, so surely is your doom fixed and sealed, unless, within four and twenty hours, you have doubled the Burgh-head."

"Farewell, mother!" said Cleveland, as she departed, bending a look upon him, in which, as he could perceive by the lamp, sorrow was mingled with displeasure.

The interview, which thus concluded, left a strong effect even upon the mind of Cleveland, accustomed as he was to imminent dangers and a hair-breadth escapes. He in vain attempted to shake off the impression left by the words of Norna, which he felt the more powerful, because they were in a great measure divested of her wonted mystic tone, which he contended. A thousand times he regretted that he had from time to time delaying the resolution, which he had long adopted, to quit his dreadful and dangerous trade; and as often he firmly determined, that could he but see—

When Cleveland awoke, the gray dawn was already mingling with the twilight of an Orcadian night. He found himself on the verge of a beautiful sheet of water which, close by the place where he had rested, was nearly divided by two tongues of land that approach each other from the opposing sides of the lake, and are in some degree united by the Bridge of Boisgar, a long causeway, containing openings to permit the flow and reflux of the tide. Behind him, and fronting to the bridge, stood that remarkable semicircle of huge upright stones, which has no rival in Britain, excepting the inimitable monument at Stonehenge. These immense blocks of stone, all of them above twenty feet, and several being even fourteen or fifteen feet in height, stood around the pirate in the gray light of the dawning, like the phantom forms of antediluvian giants, who, shrouded in the habiliments of the dead, came to revisit, by this pale light, the earth which they had plagued by their oppression and polluted by their sins, till they brought down upon it the vengeance of long-suffering Heaven.

Cleveland was less interested by this singular monument of antiquity than by the distant view of Stromness, which he could as yet scarce discover. He lost no time in striking a light, by the assistance of one of his pistols, and some wet fern supplied him with fuel sufficient to make the appointed signal. It had been earnestly watched for on board the sloop; for Goffe's incapacity became daily more apparent; and even his most steady adherents agreed that it would be best to submit to Cleveland's command till they got back to the West Indies.

Bunce, who came with the boat to bring off his favorite commander, danced, cursed, shouted, and sported for joy, when he saw him once more at freedom. "They had already," he said, "made some progress in visualizing the sloop, and they might have made more but for that drunken old swab Goffe, who minded nothing but splicing the mainbrace."

The boat's crew were inspired with the same enthusiasm, and rowed so hard that, although the tide was against them, and the air of wind failed, they soon placed Cleveland once more on the quarter-deck of the vessel which it was his misfortune to command.

(To be continued.)

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when the children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes as "bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhoea, whether arising from teething or other causes. Twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup, and take no other kind. mar 8 eod & wky

Crapaud Carnival.

The Carnival at Crapaud on Wednesday last, was a decided success. A large number of spectators were present despite the bad condition of the roads. The Rink was beautifully decorated for the occasion, and Westmoreland's Band furnished some choice selections of music. Considering the short notice given, the managers are to be congratulated on the success of their first Carnival in the above Rink.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

The Potato Measure.

SIR.—The potato fever must be very high at Charlottetown, when the dealers in that commodity are taking so much pains about what kind of potatoes we farmers ought to grow, and the manner in which we ought to cultivate them to suit the American market. These would-be scientists also tell us that we must guard as much as possible against rot, and analyze the causes which bring it about. These professional gentlemen should go further and tell us what kind of stock we ought to raise, for beef, mutton, pork, butter, cheese, eggs, horses, etc., and analyze and ascertain what kind of food is best for early maturity, and to increase the volume of this important branch of farming. The answer to the above questions will be of much more importance to farmers than what kind of potatoes we ought to raise for the American market, or what kind of measure is used to dispose of them.

Any one having one eye, and that half open, can see in a moment that the whole aim of these dealers is to increase their profit in a two-fold manner, as the resolution submitted at the close of the convention will show. (1) In the ordinary manner of buying cheap and selling dear, and (2) in the extraordinary and dishonest manner of adding one gallon to the present lawful 23 gallon measure.

This measure was tested at Ottawa by the Minister of Inland Revenue, and estimated to contain 150 pounds of potato (average size) at 60 pounds to the bushel and is as near the standard as any measure of capacity can be.

Now, Sir, every trader is in possession of one or two of these measures, and the rickety
