VACATION NOTES.

A Trip to Cape Breton.

SCENES AT CAPE MABOU.

How Travel Has Changed.

A visit to Cape Mabou involves a drive of about six miles along a pleasant road, which climbs gradually upward till you reach an elevation of about one thousand feet. Here a spacious plateau, extending perhaps seven miles in length by three or more in breadth, opens out before you—the finest grazing land, I was assured, in Cape Breton. Farm houses are scattered about, and everything wears an air of comfort. Here you can enjoy a cool breeze, which is rarely wanting in this elevated spot, and, above all, you can feast your eyes upon a view which once seen is never forgotten.

The longest holiday passes quickly amid such scenes, and in such charming society, and reluctantly we are forced to say good-bye to our Mabou friends, not without plans and purposes being formed to renew our acquaintance with them some other day.

But one more view. Stand with me on Cape Mabou and watch the setting sun on one of these evenings, which I have seen so often in Cape Breton, when the parting rays of the king of day shoot through masses of purple cloud until sky and sea glow alike with crimson flame. Long streamers of light dart upward and masses of gold and opal and grey, tints such as never grew under a painter's hand, fill the vaulted dome with glory and beauty un-speakable.

But we are now well on our way to New Glasgow, and for this season at least, must say good bye to our Cape Breton friends.

Boston Markets.

BOSTON, Aug. 6. EGGS.—Under moderate receipts and a steady good demand there was a further improvement in the market for choice fresh stock during the first part of the week, and some sales of strictly choice fresh Michigan P. E. Island, etc., were made at 19c, but since Tuesday receipts have been liberal and with the market glutted with all kinds of fruits and berries demand has been light, and at the close the market is back to about the prices quoted a week ago.

POTATOES.—Receipts are light but are fully enough to meet the demand and prices are ruling low. The best Rose and Hebrons have been selling for the past few days at $1.62 to $1.75, but the outside is an extreme price and hard to make.

FISH.—Receipts of codfish are light and prices are well sustained. Herring quiet and unchanged. Mackerel in moderate supply and selling well with prices the same as last quoted.
