Gemini's Hatch Claimed Unsafe

SOFIA (AP)—Soviet cosmonaut Alexei Leonov said here the double airlock on Voskhod II provided a better and safer means of leaving a spaceship in space than the hatch of Gemini IV. He called Gemini's hatch "unsafe" for walks in space.

Leonov, first man to step into space during the Voskhod flight last March, compared his historic "stroll" with the similar performance of American astronaut Edward White aboard the Gemini capsule.

In an interview published by the Bulgarian news agency BTA, Leonov noted that White passed directly from the capsule into the vacuum of space, while he first stepped into a sealed airlock. The double doors allowed the Russian to keep Voskhod's cabin pressurized and provide a transition stage before Leonov stepped out of the spacecraft.

"Why should the tremendous vacuum at the moment of exit be felt by the whole crew?" Leonov asked.

SAYS LOCK BEST

In the case of Voskhod II, this problem was solved in a more complicated way but at the same time more correctly—by means of a lock-gate system that is isolated from the ship's cabin. Thus, the vacuum is not felt by those on the inside, where work must proceed under normal conditions.

Leonov described the Soviet airlock as difficult and complicated to build but "our engineers have deliberately chosen this solution as being the one with the better prospects."

He also said a part of the Gemini program calling for dumping objects into space probably was called off "because of the unsafe hatch of the Gemini IV ship which, regardless of the crew's desire, could not be opened a second time."

"With the (Soviet) lock-gate system... such shortcomings do not exist," he said. "It can be opened and closed a countless number of times. And it is this factor that will make the American think I've got again and resort to some other system of guaranteeing the spaceman's exit and return to the spacecraft."

Conservative Has Criticism Of Successive Oppositions

OTTAWA (CP)—Conservative MP Gordon Alken said in the Commons that the opposition should provide an acceptable alternative to the government rather than attempt to "destroy" the government.

Entering the debate on proposed changes in procedure and rules, he said Canadians are losing their respect for Parliament after 10 years of watching successive Oppositions block legislation and twist the rules in all-out attempts to bring down the government.

Mr. Alken, a lawyer and MP for Party Sound—Muskegon, said he generally supports government proposals to limit debates and improve the Commons' efficiency.

Parliament had witnessed a "decade of destruction" since the 1955 defence production debate and it was time for changes. MPs should not engage in "interminable debates" to destroy legislation, personalities and governments.

OPPOSE LIMIT

Mr. Alken expressed reservations about the proposed "guillotine" rule, which would allow a minister with the majority vote of the House to limit debate on a certain bill to six days.

This would permit the government to force legislation through the Commons before the Opposition and news media had time to arouse public opinion against it, he said.

He suggested that when the "guillotine" is applied, debate on the bill concerned be adjourned for one week after each stage is completed. This would lengthen the process to 21 days, he added.

Mr. Alken introduced a sub-amendment to an amendment moved Thursday night by Andrew Brewin (NDP—Toronto Greenway).

Mr. Brewin proposed that speeches be limited to 20 minutes when the guillotine is enforced. The normal limit is 40 minutes.

Opening lead—jack of diamonds.

Luck is a big factor in the play of many hands, but there are occasions when skillful play can overcome bad luck.

Take this deal where declarer encounters unusually bad luck. Let's say he covers the jack of diamonds with the queen and East takes the ace and returns the queen of hearts.

The king loses to the ace and West returns a heart to the ten. Declarer then ruffs the heart continuation. After drawing trumps, he tries a club finesse and goes down one.

There is no doubt that the hand is unlucky for South. Three cards are badly placed for him—the ace of diamonds, the ace of hearts, and the queen of clubs. With any one of these cards in the opposite hand, South would make the contract with ease.

Yet, despite the misfortune of having three vital cards stacked against him, South should make the hand. His first play is the critical one. He should play the four of diamonds from dummy, not the queen. The odds are tremendous in favor of the opening lead, that East has the ace of diamonds. With this as a starting point, South can assure himself of ten tricks by playing a low diamond from dummy.

Presumably the jack will win the trick and whatever West plays next, South is on Easy Street. Thus, suppose West makes a neutral lead at trick two, such as a trump. Dummy wins and leads the king of diamonds through East, establishing a diamond trick in dummy on which South can discard a heart. Declarer's only losers turn out to be a diamond, a heart and a club.

Note that East cannot defeat the contract by overtaking the jack of diamonds at trick one with the ace. In such case, South would lose two hearts and a diamond right away, but that would be all the tricks he would lose.

Silver In Coins May Be Cut Here Along With U.S.

OTTAWA (CP)—Canada may have to lower the silver content of its coinage as a result of President Johnson's recommendation to Congress to cut the use of silver in American coins, it was indicated here.

Officials of the Royal Canadian Mint declined comment on the Washington announcement that silver is to be dropped from American dimes and quarters, and cut to 40 per cent from 90 per cent of American half-dollars.

Silver is used in Canadian 10, 25, 50-cent and $1 coins but the Canadian coins contain only 80 per cent silver in comparison to the American 90-per-cent content. Canadian one-cent pieces are bronze, containing copper, tin and zinc. Canadian five-cent pieces are pure nickel.

One of the long-range effects of the new U.S. policy, if adopted by Congress, may be to let the free world price of silver rise. Officials said that if it reached more than $1.50 an ounce in Canadian funds, it would be profitable to melt down Canadian coins for their silver content.

However, it is understood here, President Johnson's proposal is to maintain the price of silver at its present level, about $1.45 an ounce in Canadian funds, for perhaps a number of years. If the price rises above this level it would be profitable to sell American coins for the silver in them.

RETURN TRUE BILL

CORNER BROOK, Nfld. (CP) Joseph Clevis March, 22, of nearby Lourdes, will stand trial here Monday on capital murder in the April 5 strangulation death of Douglas Young, 76, also of Lourdes. A 19-year grand jury brought in a true bill of indictment against Clevis Thursday. Mr. Young's body, with a leather boot lace knotted around the throat, was found in his home.
