MacKenzie, who was reportedly walking with the traffic, was struck by a car driven by Lloyd Walsh of Albany. Dr. David Stewart of Crapaud was at the scene.

Approximately one-half hour later a motor scooter bearing two members of the local RCAF station, was struck from behind in the Albany area and totally demolished.

Jon Vickers' Performance Is Given Standing Ovation

(The following was written especially for The Guardian by the director of music for P.E.I.)

By CHRISTOPHER GLEDHILL

An enthusiastic crowd gave Jon Vickers a standing ovation after his recital on Sunday night. About eight years ago I remember hearing him in the title-role in Handel's Sampson in a performance given by Montreal Elgar Choir. At that time he was not the Covent Garden star tenor, and comparatively few people knew of him. He was so much better than everybody else that evening that, in the common phrase, it wasn't even funny, and I was not at all surprised to hear later on that he had gone on to great things. It was a rare privilege to hear him again and mark how he has amply fulfilled his earlier promise.

Jon Vickers is endowed by nature with a magnificent heroic tenor voice. On top of this he has learned how to use it most effectively. He has also the gift of dramatic interpretation — when he is singing an air of Sampson he becomes the suffering hero himself.

The program was evidently very carefully thought out, as indeed Mr. Vickers himself assured us.

"REALIZED" SONGS

After singing himself with a group of arias by Alesandro Scarlatti, father of Domenico, he proceeded to sing a group of Purcell songs "realized" by Benjamin Britten. For those readers who do not happen to know what this means I should explain that Purcell in common with other composers of this period, wrote merely the melodic line together with a bass part, the harmonies being indicated roughly by a system of musical shorthand known as figured bass.

The individual performer might interpret this figured bass in different ways, so long as he kept to the specified chords. The distribution of the notes in each chord are capable of considerable alternatives, and passing notes and the like can be introduced at the discretion of the keyboard performer. The tradition has been lost, and thus modern editions print a "realization" or arrangement of this figured base.

The high point of the first part of the program was the recitative and air from Sampson "O loss of sight" and "Total eclipse" which I had heard Mr. Vickers sing several years ago. I heard again the same rapt intensity, and with it an added maturity and authority.

COMPLETELY AT EASE

Mr. Vickers is completely at ease on the concert platform. It is obvious he has attained this serenity of spirit at the expense of unremitting study. At the end of Vaughan Williams' beautiful setting of Stevenson's words "Bright is the ring of words when the right man rings them" he added in a conversational tone, "I like that song'.

His short and relevant remarks in between the numbers were quite helpful to the audience. At the same time I was distressed to note that nothing was done in the printed program to guide the audience towards the meaning of the songs in Italian and German.

I am afraid that unless the Confederation Theatre takes this matter seriously the cause of music in Charlottetown may receive a serious set-back. Several concert-goers have complained about this, and I do urge those in charge with all the emphasis that I can muster that they attend to this matter in the future.

The evening concluded with a rousing performance of four of Dvorak's Gypsy Songs, rendered in great style. Mr. Vickers is always at his best in songs of the open air, and his healthy and virile attack was a genuine tonic. The short song "There's not a swain in the plain", sung with delicate humor, was thrown in as an encore to the delighted audience.

Square Rigger Coming Here

When the Christian Radich, a great white steel-hulled, full-rigged ship comes flying into Charlottetown harbor next Sunday morning with all sails set, oldtimers may be forgiven their reminiscences over the age of sail, now long past.

The Radich is a Norwegian training ship, and within the past month or so has been making appearances along the Atlantic seaboard, including calls at New York and a majestic sail past up the Hudson River.

Her young naval cadet crew receives training aboard her in the traditional manner as she sails year-round to many parts of the world. Her courtesy call to Charlottetown next week will give many here their first chance to see and inspect at close hand the marvels of a true sailing ship in the old tradition — despite her auxiliary engine and metal hull.

Banks Close, Limited Service By Post Office

Banks and the post office will receive a rest tomorrow during the provincial holiday set aside to commemorate that well-known meeting here 100 years ago.

The post office, unlike the banks which will be completely closed to the public, will offer a limited service during the day.

In the dominion building itself there will be no wicket service, though special delivery receipt and despatch services will carry on as usual.

Letter carriers get the holiday and there will be no house delivery. The rural route service will continue, however, unlike its city counterpart.

There will be one street collection from the mailboxes, the same as on Sundays.

French Ship To Arrive Amid 21-Gun Salute

The good people of Charlottetown are due for a rude wakening, literally, this morning.

At about 8.30 the French Navy frigate Commandant Bourdais will steam into port blasting away in a 21-gun salute to the land. The honor of the occasion should be kept in mind by any late-sleeping or shock-prone townspeople who might take slight offense at being brought suddenly to their feet by the booming guns of a full-fledged warship.

That first barrage will be followed by a return salute from the guns of an army shore battery.

Newfoundland Discovery Said Early Settlement Clue

WASHINGTON (AP)—Archeologists have hailed a tiny stone wheel, found in Newfoundland, as a clue to a Viking settlement in North America nearly 1,000 years ago.

The wheel was identified as part of a spinning device and described as the first Viking household article ever discovered on the continent.

Dr. Melville Bell Grosvenor, president and editor of the National Geographic Society, said Saturday it was discovered by Norwegian archeologist Anne Stine Ingstad at L'Anse au Meadow, Newfoundland, a historic site now being excavated.

He said recovery of the wheel in the heart of the old Norse settlement on Newfoundland suggests that the Vikings brought their wives to attend to household chores in their unsuccessful attempt to establish a permanent settlement in "Vinland" about the year 1000. That's long before Christopher Columbus arrived in the new world in 1492.

Mrs. Ingstad said the 1¼-inch-wide piece of carved soapstone served as a flywheel on a wool - spinning spindle. It is called a spindle whorl.

SIMILAR IN SHAPE

"I am convinced this is a Norse artifact," Mrs. Ingstad said, "because of the material and the way it is shaped—flat at the bottom and rounded at the top. Many similar whorls have been found in Scandinavia and Greenland, dating from Viking times in the middle ages."

L'Anse au Meadow is a remote fishing village at the northernmost tip of Newfoundland. Dr. Helge Ingstad, Mrs. Ingstad's husband, earlier had discovered the first proven ruins of a Norse settlement there.

He found the layered turf foundations of nine long-abandoned buildings. Radio-carbon studies dated traces of the dwellings back 500 years before Columbus discovered America.

Dr. Ingstad says the site closely fits the description given in Icelandic sagas of "Vinland," the community founded by Leif Ericson.

The whorl discovered by Mrs. Ingstad was examined by Dr. Junius Bird, curator of archeology at the American Museum of Natural History.

He said neither Eskimos nor Indians in Newfoundland used spinning whorls.

DISCOVERED BY HELPER

The whorl was discovered Aug. 14, Mrs. Ingstad said, by a 16-year-old Canadian volunteer helper, Tony Beardsley.

Historians generally have accepted that Norsemen came to America many centuries ago. But until the discoveries by the Ingstads there was no knowledge of where they landed or solid proof they had been on this continent.

Previous discoveries of alleged Viking structures or artifacts have proved not to be authentic.

"The whorl shows certainly that there must have been women in the settlement," Mrs. Ingstad said. "Norsemen never would have done any spinning—that is women's work. It's also a strong indication that they brought sheep with them. One of the rooms in the big house may have been used as a stable."

The Vikings roamed the Atlantic and the coasts of Europe from the 9th to the 11th centuries, bold sea-roving warriors and colonizers.

It was from the Viking settlement on Greenland that Leif Ericson sailed westward to a new landfall, according to the Icelandic sagas. Dr. Ingstad used the sagas, an old Icelandic map and careful research in his long search for "Vinland."
