

Smugglers' War Turns Marseille Into Terror Camp

By JOHN BUSH
MARSEILLE, France — (Reuters) A smugglers' war has turned this French port into a gangster-ridden terror city where inhabitants are afraid to walk at night. In the opera district near the city's old port, gang warfare has taken a toll of nine lives in the last year.

In the opera district near the city's old port, gang warfare has taken a toll of nine lives in the last year.

The jailing of 32-year-old New Yorker Elliott Forrest and an accomplice after the trial of members of one smuggling gang here earlier this month failed to end the "cigarette war."

Innocent bystanders have been among the victims in gun battles as rival gangs clashed in the city's darkened streets.

"PARSON" SHOT
Latest victim was Hyacinthe Quilichini, nicknamed "The Parson" because he had been to a church school.

He was shot to death one night last week in a street fight outside the opera between two groups of gangsters. Three other gangsters were wounded.

Quilichini had four bullets in his body.

Police reports said he was acting as bodyguard to Jean Susini, a man suspected by gangster Joseph Muziotti of having murdered his brother in a Marseille bar in December.

Jean Susini, wounded by a bullet in the thigh in the latest battle, disappeared.

Vengeance-seeking Joseph Muziotti also was wounded.

NO PEACE
The waterfront peace residents of the opera district hoped to have materialized following the trial of one smuggling gang and the subsequent jailing of Forrest.

The New Yorker was sentenced to three years for trying to smuggle into France $94,500 worth of cigarettes from the yacht Combie, which he boarded with his own crew in the Mediterranean.

Piracy charges against Forrest and 46 other men indicted with him were dropped by the prosecution. Only 13 of these men appeared for trial. Police believed two of them had been murdered in a quarrel over sharing of the spoils.

Handling Of Middle East Brings Down Wrath On Eden

LONDON (Reuters) — Prime Minister Eden's government will face a rising tide of Labor criticism over its handling of the Middle East situation in a Commons debate today.

The continued Arab-Israeli tension will be the dominant issue of the one-day foreign affairs debate, requested by the Labor party.

Eden will wind up for the government, replying to what are expected to be scathing Labor attacks on its policy of building up the five-nation Baghdad Defence Pact, and of maintaining its current restrictions on arms shipments to the Middle East.

Labor spokesmen are expected to argue that the Czechoslovak arms deal with Egypt last fall has already tilted the Arab-Israeli arms balance, which the Western powers have tried to maintain for the last six years, against the Jewish state.

They are expected to maintain that it now is up to Britain, the United States and France to redress the "unbalance" by helping Israel.

Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd who will open the debate, is expected to again emphasize the Western powers' view that for them to try to match Communist arms supplies to either side would touch off an armaments race which could end in an Arab-Israeli war.
