The bidding:

Opening lead—king of hearts. Bridge is a tough game, but it's also a logical game. We are reminded of this by the classic hand on view today.

The early part of the play followed routine lines. South won the heart lead, took two rounds of trumps, cashed A-K of clubs, and exited with a heart. West cashed his Q-J of hearts, and now had to decide what to do next.

Those are the facts. West has two tricks in the cash register and is trying to get two more. There's only one correct play for him to make at this stage, and it's not easy.

The proper play is to lead the Jack of diamonds. No other lead can be logically supported. But let's see why West should lead the Jack.

He knows declarer started with exactly five spades. He knows South started with precisely three hearts. Declarer has already played two clubs and therefore has just three unknown cards. It must be assumed these three cards are all diamonds, otherwise the contract is unbeatable. Thus, if South's unknown cards consist of two diamonds and a club, the defense will be unable to win more than two hearts and a diamond. This possibility is brushed aside because it is a defeatist view.

Once declarer is granted three diamonds, the next question is whether they include the queen. If East has the queen, declarer will inevitably lose two more tricks regardless of which diamond is led. So the assumption is made South has the queen.

If this is the case, though, the lead now of either the ace or a small diamond will automatically give declarer the contract. Only the lead of the Jack has a chance to defeat South.

So the Jack is led. Presumably, declarer plays low from dummy and wins with the queen. A diamond is returned and West plays low. South will probably play the nine from dummy on the basis West had the J-10.

The defense suggested may or may not succeed, depending upon whether South guesses the true situation, but any other defense is completely hopeless.

Indian Prime Minister Welcomes U. K. Suggestion

NEW DELHI (Reuters)—Prime Minister Nehru told Prime Minister Macmillan Thursday he welcomes the British leader's suggestion for an East-West non-aggression pact.

Speaking at a banquet in Macmillan's honor, Nehru said Macmillan's proposal received a warm reception "certainly in India, certainly I think in every country of Asia, and I think elsewhere too in Europe and America."

Macmillan suggested the idea of a non-aggression pact in a radio address last Saturday before the start of a six-week Commonwealth tour. The foreign officer said such a pact must be part of a wider agreement.

Nehru added "this warm reception came because people all over the world hanker after some lessening of tension and are hankering to be rid of this ever-present fear of danger, the possibility of wars or terrible disaster."

Macmillan said "our people share a universal desire for peace and tolerance between nations, and respect for the independence of small states as well as large."

Report Stassen Fights For New Approach To Russia

By JOHN SCALI

WASHINGTON (AP)—Harold E. Stassen, backing powerful forces inside the Eisenhower administration, is reported urging that important new disarmament concessions be offered Russia.

Stassen, the administration's disarmament chief, is understood to have put his recommendations in writing in the face of opposition from State Secretary Dulles, Lewis L. Strauss, chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, and the defence department.

It is considered likely Stassen will quit his post if President Eisenhower does not accept his proposals for what he believes would be an easing of international tensions. Stassen is said to regard the Dulles-Strauss position as excessively cautious.

This dispute will be laid before Eisenhower and the National Security Council at a showdown meeting in the White House Jan. 6.

A quick presidential decision seems in prospect, since most administration leaders believe new disarmament talks with Russia are in prospect, possibly in late January.

LOOK FOR '58 TALKS

Despite the distance separating the Soviet Union and the West on disarmament, most Western diplomats in Moscow, were reported to feel negotiations to halt the arms race will begin in 1958.

In London, Prime Minister Macmillan drafted a note to Soviet Premier Bulganin leaving the door open for a summit conference on cold war issues provided it is preceded by a successful foreign ministers meeting.

If Stassen comes out second best at the Jan. 6 show down, he might break publicly with Dulles and use the situation as campaign ammunition in a bid for the Republican nomination for governor of Pennsylvania next year.

SARTORIUM SPLENDOR

NEW YORK (AP)—Labor racketeer Johnny Dio, attired as though he were about to appear in a fashion show, was taken to Sing Sing prison Friday to begin serving a 15-to-30-year extortion sentence. Dio was led in handcuffs from a jail cell to a prison van. The most striking part of his attire was an expensive tweed jacket with a blue curdury collar.
