student loan policy.

Regan said he would meet with the CBA in September to discuss the effect of their new policies. If necessary, he promised to meet with individual bank officials.

The banks have complained for several years that student loans are expensive to administer and their interest rates are too low.

But Wright said the banks have not backed up their claim that they lose money on student loans.

"Until they prove their case, I don't see that they have any right to put pressure on the Secretary of State using students as pawns," said Wright.

Federal-provincial negotiations for a major restructuring of the 18 year old loans system begin in September. Regan will meet with the CBA this fall to discuss their proposals.

Legislation is expected to be introduced in Parliament this fall to go into effect in September 1983.
