STRICT ATTENTION

to Business, Honesty and Square Dealing, and prying Cash every time, is what has placed

L. E. PROWSE

to the front of all competitors, in CLOTHING, HATS, &c.

He does not advertize to sell goods at cost, but he guarantees to sell from 10 to 25 per cent less than those who do advertize to sell at cost.

He does not try to deceive the people by making a big blow and offering paltry rewards, but tries to do things right and has the goods to back him up in what he advertizes.

He has now about 6,500 HATS and $4,000 worth of CLOTHING, which he guarantees to sell from 10 to 25 per cent less than any house in the trade. A lot of this Clothing was bought less than half price, and will be sold less than half price.

He does not ask the people to believe his advertisement until they see his prices; he knows then they will believe, and knows that the goods and prices back him up every time.

All goods freely shown, or sent to any part of the town.

Please don't forget to call.

Ethel De Wolfe

—OR—
SHADOWS AND SUNSHINE.

BY S. M. BENT.

CHAPTER XVIII.—(Continued.)

"Excuse me," said the old surgeon, "I did not remember you at first, but are you not Paul Chandley?"

"That is my name, doctor, if I am in the flesh; but just now I am so supremely happy that I must be in some Paradise, and I am half doubtful of my own identity."

"Allow me, then, to most heartily congratulate you. You have won the noblest, the bravest, and the truest girl on this earth. Take her, and be as true to her as she is to you, and you will be the happiest man this side of heaven. Take her, with the blessing of an old man who has sworn to protect her as long as it is in his power to do so. She is worthy to be the wife of a brave man."

Brushing a tear from his eye, he hastened away to escape the thanks showered upon him by the happy pair.

Glancing from her lover's handsome face to the group around them, Ethel caught the eyes of Warner gazing maliciously upon her.

"What is he doing here, Paul?" she cried, "is he still to torment me?"

"Never mind him, darling, replied he in a soothing and reassuring tone, "he is being severely punished for his perfidy by being compelled to witness our happiness."

"I think, Captain Chandley," said Warner, "that this nonsense has gone quite far enough, you will please remember that I have not yet resigned my claim to the hand of Miss De Wolfe."

"Your claim! your claim indeed! as though falsehood, and deceit, and cowardice, and treachery, and persecution, could give you a claim to anything truthful and pure, terms you do not understand. Your claim! Oh! I could tear your lying tongue from you, and crush you down into the foul depths of your own infamy, were you worthy chastisement at the hands of a gentleman."

"Your words, Captain Chandley, are bitter, but unjust, and they shall be remembered."

"If you wish to prove them unjust, I will be happy to give you the opportunity to do so at any time and place that may suit your convenience. Had you not once held an honorable position in my regiment, I should be loath to accord to you the slightest recognition due a gentleman."

"We will waive that question at present, Captain Chandley. Come, Miss De Wolfe, do you forget that you are bound to me by a promise that only awaits fulfillment?"

"Bound to you, Lionel Warner, at whose name virtue trembles? Ah me! a truer and nobler man holds my heart captive, a man so far superior to your nature, that there is no comparison between you," answered she, as she looked up at Paul with smiling face, and put her hand in his, while the roses came back to her soft cheeks.

"What right, what particular claim, do you advance to the hand of this dear girl?" asked Paul.

"She is promised to me in marriage, by her own consenting words, and the legal sanction of her father; my love for her is as deep as yours; and am I not as honorable a man as you?"

"You speak of honor! who played the coward when your country needed you you whose deeds would make the very walls blush were they named; you know not the meaning of the word honor. And yet you, hound, viper, coward, presumed to profane the sacred passion, and to draw your cursed snares and devilish webs around the unprotected. But that is on a par with your courage and patriotism. Begone! I have no words for you but those of withering scorn. There goes your hired spy and partner in villainy, Sergeant Pidgeon.
See him sneaking out of the room! You look surprised, but within the last day or two I have fathomed much of the vile treachery that you and he played on me, and I regret that you can escape a court-martial, which he cannot. Follow him, he is fitter company for you than the presence of honest men."

"Yes, go, please," said Ethel, "I wish never to behold your face again; go, that we may the sooner forget you."

"You do not disguise your hate, Miss De Wolfe," said Warner.

"I do not hate you," replied she, "for hate, as the poets say, is the next sweetest thing to love, and you are beneath any noble passion. Scorn, unutterable scorn, and the most bitter contempt, are the only emotions I feel towards you."

"You had better go," said Paul, "before I forget myself, and chastise you as I would a cur!"

"Shall we kick the villain out, comrade?" asked one of the officers, who now saw the drift of affairs, and whose generous sympathies were enlisted on behalf of their popular brother officer and his fair fiancée.

"No, thanks, don't touch the viper, let him crawl away in the slime of his own treachery, and hide himself from the presence of all honest men."

Warner, realizing that the game he had so treacherously played was lost, and reading aright the angry looks of the officers standing by, turned to Mr. De Wolfe, and extended his hand, saying:

"Well, good bye, Mr. De Wolfe; I hope you don't consider me quite so bad as I have been painted to-day?"

"I consider you worse sir, infinitely worse; my eyes have been opened to your baseness. You first tried to ruin me, and then to rob me of my daughter, but a just heaven thwarted both those designs. You and your amiable father gave me a hard road to travel, and a long hill to climb, but I managed to overcome all obstacles at last, and am now in a position to decline any further association with you. You will pardon me, therefore, if I refuse to take the hand of a scoundrel."

"Bravo! Bravo!" cried the officers, and Lionel Warner stole away, followed by the jeers of those who had witnessed the scene.

Turning to Ethel's father, Paul said, "Years ago, Mr. De Wolfe, I won the love of this dear girl, but these years of separation have been painfully eventful, and much has happened that needs explanation. Once again I ask you for her hand; I offer her an honorable name, one on which no stain has fallen through all this weary war; will you again bless our love?"

"Freely, my dear boy, freely; take her with a father's blessing, and pardon what you may have seemed in me harshness towards you. I have much to ask your pardon for."

"There, let the dead past bury its dead; let us be happy at last, and forget all the ills of the past in the joy of the present."

"Twas the picture, Paul, that led to our meeting," said Ethel, "only for it we might not have known that we were so near each other. And your thought of me even when you believed me untrue, when you painted the great dark cloud coming over the brightness of my life?"

"Yes, darling," replied he, tenderly, as he drew her arm within his, "you were always in my thoughts; a few strokes of the brush will turn that dark cloud to brightness, as our sorrow has been turned to joy.
Come brothers," said he to his fellow officers, "let me introduce to you the dearest girl in the wide world."

Joy bells ring, orange blossoms are wreathed on a fair brow, the soft notes of the wedding march float through the glad-some air, and the words are spoken that unite loving hearts "till death" in jewelled bands and silken fetters.

Sunshine is again over all. The dark clouds have passed from over the orb of love, and his rich refulgent tide of rosy light bathes the valley of happiness with a golden flood of joy.

Nellie Grant Sartoris.

HER MISERABLE LIFE—NEGLECTED, DESERTED AND IN POVERTY.

A Washington despatch to the Boston Journal says: A relative of the Grant family in this city is authority for the statement that the married life of Nellie Grant Sartoris is more humiliating and unpleasant than has yet been made public. Mrs. Sar-toris makes her home with her husband's father in the North of England. She is treated as a sort of poor relative. Two rooms are set aside for the use of herself and children. Their needs are furnished, but nothing else is given to them either by her husband or Sartoris, Sr. The younger Sartoris, it is said, has not contributed a penny to his wife's support for years. It is a well known fact that for a couple of years prior to General Grant's death remittances of money were regularly sent to Nellie to provide herself and children with clothing and other necessary articles. All the members of the Grant family still contribute to the support of Mrs. Sartoris and children.
They have urged Mrs. Sartoris for years to separate from her husband and return to America. Meanwhile Sartoris is racing about England spending the meagre allowance his father gives him among companions of his own kind. Reports which reach here from New York say Sartoris has been absent from his wife since last spring.
She hears from him only at rare intervals.

What Engineering Skill Can Do.

(Indianapolis Journal.)

While much has been said about Government jobs and political fraud attending the completion of the Canadian Pacific road, it still remains a notable example of engineering skill and business energy. To join Montreal to Vancouver by rail it was necessary to cut through more than 300 miles of solid rock, to turn fourteen streams from their natural beds, to build hundreds of iron bridges—one being over 1000 feet long and another some 286 feet high—and to keep an army of men, sometimes as high as 15,000, continually employed. The cost of the road, plant and branches secured, has been $72,500,000, which is somewhat cheaper than our transcontinental lines.
The present debt of the Canadian Pacific is $35,000,000, which looks small beside the $200,000,000 and some of Union Pacific liabilities. But the burden of a debt depends upon the money-earning capacity of the property, and for this the friends of the Canadian Pacific must watch and wait.
With the opening of this new route Canada gets to the Pacific coast by travelling 376 miles less than we do. Liverpool freight going via the United States to the Pacific coast goes 720 miles more than it would be compelled to go on the Canadian route, and the advantage of the latter route over ours in the trans-shipment of goods from Liverpool to Yokohama is 880 miles. It is, therefore, pardonable in the Dominion papers at this time to celebrate the opening of their road by visions of great commercial prosperity.

A Prediction Fulfilled.

The Emperor Napoleon III. was by nature very superstitious. The following anecdote was related in 1864, long years before the fulfillment of the prediction that it contains. Napoleon III. one day took into his head to consult the celebrated chiro-mancian, Desbarrolles, who died the other day at a very advanced age. Desbarrolles told him some curious facts respecting his character, his tastes, and his past life.
"Now," quoth the Emperor, "tell me something about the future. Where will my death take place, and by what malady shall I die?" Desbarrolles hesitated for a moment.
"Sire," he said at length, "you have asked me for a frank response, and I will reply to you frankly. You are destined to breathe your last on English soil, and you will perish by the knife." Very curiously was the prediction fulfilled, though the knife proved to be not that of an assassin, but that of surgeon.
