

To Correspondents.

We must request that every communication may contain the real name and address of the person sending it, not for the purpose of publication, but as a guarantee of the writer's good faith. The Editor begs it to be clearly understood that he cannot, under any circumstances, undertake to answer questions through the post. Nor will he return rejected contributions, whether poetic or otherwise. Questions requiring answers on Tuesday should not reach him later than Thursday of the previous week.

Fred.—The first tramway in London was opened on 21st March, 1861, between the Marble Arch and Bayswater; that between Victoria Station and Westminster Abbey on the 15th April. They were taken up in 1862. Tramways were re-introduced in 1868, and in 1870 a bill was passed to facilitate their construction.

Blacksmith Bill.—You should advertise. Author.—The sentence is good English. Hobart Pasha.—The last battle between the houses of York and Lancaster was fought near Market Bosworth, in Leicester-shire, Monday, 22d August, 1485.

Curious.—The East India Company received their first charter on the 31st December, 1600. Their fleet sailed from Torbay, 2d May, 1601.

H. Soper.—Yes; if he wished to become a good one.

At the battle of Inkerman, on the 5th November, 1854, 8,000 British troops engaged 50,000 Russians for six hours, when the French came to their support, and the Russians were driven back with great slaughter. The English loss was 3,000, the French 1,726, and the Russians 12,000 killed and wounded. There were 60,598 British troops in the Crimea, 31st March, 1856.

Harris.—You are only entitled to one vote.

A. B. C.—You had better keep possession, and complete a twenty years' title. Davies.—On the ninth day after personal service.

Fair Play.—Unless the landlord clearly gave a half-year's notice, his mere intention would not suffice.

H. W.—You have no jurisdiction over your sister, neither have you any right to open her letters.

W. H.—Having used and gone by the name for upwards of twenty years, you can safely marry in that name, and the marriage will be legal.

A. W. (Our Reader).—We do not understand your question. Please write it plainer, and we will answer it.

Suez Canal.—176,002 shares, or about nine-twentieths of the entire number.

Poor Girl.—The mistress has no right to make the deduction she threatens. If she does not pay all the month's wages, proceed against her in the county court.

Anecdotes, &c.

The amusing scene described below occurred a few Sundays since in the Episcopal church at St. Augustine, Florida, and was afterwards jotted down by an old and esteemed friend of the Drawer:

He was past middle age—an editor, they said—and wore a beaming smile as he walked up the middle aisle, glancing from side to side. The pew next to the front was vacant, and he took a seat with a rather uncertain air.

"Can I sit here?" he said speaking to his neighbor in the adjoining pew.

"Oh yes, the pews are free."

"I want a seat for a friend. She is a grand-daughter of Jefferson."

"Certainly."

"Who is the minister?" [in a loud tone].

"Mr. Root."

"No, I mean the other man, the stranger?"

"I do not know."

He was evidently uneasy, and stood up, facing the congregation, with an expectant air. He turned to Mr. Astor, who sat behind him, and said, in an explanatory way.

"I am expecting a friend, a grand-daughter of Jefferson. Can I seat her here?"

"Certainly."

He was not satisfied—perhaps she was already in the church; and he walked down the aisle and back again, peering into every pew. He had hardly seated himself again before a lady and child appeared in the aisle to whom he offered seats.

"Is this your pew, madam?"

"No, Sir."

"May I sit here?"

"Certainly."

"I wish to offer a seat to a friend of mine whom I am expecting. She is a grand-daughter of Jefferson."

To this there was no answer, merely a bow. Our friends continued:

"What is your name?" [standing up, and leaning over the child].

"Paine."

"Do you spell it with an i or a y?"

"With an i."

"My name is Walker. What state do you come from?"

"From Massachusetts."

"From near Boston?"

"From Boston."

"Oh!"

He is restless, and looks around. General and Mrs. Dent appear. He gives a seat to the latter, the general—who, by the way, is in command at St. Augustine—going over to a far corner. Again the question.

"What is your name?"

"Dent."

"My name is Walker, Mrs. Dent allow me to introduce you to my friend Mrs. Paine."

[Evidently used to the amenities of polite society, he feared the ladies might not feel at ease sitting side by side in church without an introduction.]

Another restless waiting. Then spying General Dent in his far corner, he goes over to him, and asks:

"What do you take my seat?"

"No matter."

In the mean time the pew is filled; our friend settles himself upon a front bench, and subsides as the service commences. The grand-daughter of Jefferson does not seem to have made her appearance. And Walker has faded from Florida.
